

Growing health business through more sovereignty with No-Q

The T-Systems Sovereign Cloud powered by Google Cloud leads the way into the future with adaptive infrastructure costs - and creates the framework for compliance.

The challenge

Following the challenges of the Covid pandemic, the tech company – then operating as Vertical-Life in the climbing business – agilely developed a sophisticated slot booking and resource management solution. Subsequently, the system was used on a large scale for coordinating Covid test and vaccination appointments. The new scalable cloud solution also had to meet European compliance regulations.

The solution

Within highly regulated healthcare environment, it is necessary to comply with European and national regulations and to protect personal data efficiently. The underlying Google Cloud was able to easily handle the scalability requirements. With the additional sovereignty controls provided by T-Systems, No-Q can also meet security and privacy requirements.

The results

Today, 4,500 B2B customers, including 2,500 pharmacies, are registered on the platform as providers of healthcare services. Now that the Covid pandemic has subsided, it is additionally being used to arrange other regular healthcare services, such as blood pressure measurements, flu vaccinations, or medication analyses.

“ No-Q empowers healthcare providers to seamlessly facilitate bookable and accessible services. With a remarkable track record of processing over 76 million bookings, our healthcare services platform has emerged as a game-changer. Leveraging the T-Systems Sovereign Cloud, we have found the ideal platform to swiftly capitalize on a lucrative business opportunity while ensuring ongoing compliance. ”
