Llorente y Cuenca's leap to the cloud and the collaboration

SoftwareONE played a key role in the implementation and adoption of Google Workspace as well as in the continuous improvement in the use and adoption of new functionalities with great impact on LLYC's internal processes.

The challenge

LLYC started with an on-premise system, with servers in each of its offices, local storage, & full form connections, with high economic costs. A system was needed that allowed cost optimization, that had collaboration as a basic principle of cohesion and work in and between teams, that allowed mobility, with the highest security standards and that was scalable given the company's fast growth rate.

The solution

The first step was the use of Gmail as email, to later move on to the use of Drive, migrating all the information from local file servers to Shared Drives, taking a great step forward in collaborative work thanks to having real, global, and effective availability from any device and place. In addition, Meet has become the main communication tool between the members of the different sites.

The results

Mobility and accessibility for users, eliminating the limiting barrier of having to be physically in the office to access important information. Time savings, which translates into cost reduction. Robust information security layer, with an effective continuity, backup & recovery plan. Low pandemic impact through collaboration with Meet and Workspace. Ease & scalability to integrate new companies

> " The biggest challenge of all was to convince and eliminate the usual reluctance to change. With a solution like the one Google offered us, it was relatively easy. Their flexibility in offering us a PoC (Proof of Concept) was key, as it allowed us not only to test but also to include influential people in the organization who would later become our ambassadors in the decision making process. **"
